INTRODUCTION

In recent years, the development of modern education systems has become closely linked with pedagogical innovations and the strengthening of moral-spiritual education.

These two components play a significant role not only in improving the quality of education but also in shaping individuals who are legally aware, socially responsible, and committed to civic values.

In this context, the legal framework regulating education serves as an important foundation for ensuring that pedagogical processes are effective, transparent, and aligned with societal needs.

Pedagogical innovations refer to the introduction of new methods, technologies, and approaches in teaching and learning aimed at improving educational outcomes.

At the same time, moral-spiritual education focuses on the formation of ethical values, respect for law, cultural identity, and a sense of responsibility towards society.

The integration of these two aspects contributes to the development of individuals who are capable of active participation in civil society while respecting legal norms and social rules.

"Today, by integrating pedagogical innovations with moral and spiritual education, it is possible to enhance not only the quality of education but also the moral potential of society. Indeed, the education system serves as the foundation of civil society, fostering individuals who are not only knowledgeable but also morally mature"[2, 45].

MAIN PART

When it comes to human nature, of course, it is emphasized that it is a thinking, intelligent and at the same time a social being. Indeed, let us not take into account what aspects of it, the shortcomings of its qualities(except by biology), they will eventually depend on the mind, thinking, community of man. In turn, the sociability and mind, thinking of a person are inextricably interrelated and complement each other.

The relevance of this topic lies in the increasing importance of education as a tool for strengthening legal culture and civic consciousness. In many countries, including Uzbekistan, educational reforms emphasize the need to combine innovative teaching methods with moral and spiritual development, ensuring that learners not only acquire knowledge but also understand their rights and responsibilities within a legal framework.

The purpose of this study is to analyze the legal significance of pedagogical innovations and moral-spiritual education in the context of building a stable and law-abiding civil society. The research also aims to explore how legal regulations and educational policies support the implementation of innovative and value-oriented approaches in the education system.

The development of independent Uzbekistan is connected with the spiritual perfection of members of society, each individual and especially young people, the deep integration of ideas of independence into the minds of people, everyday life. National consciousness and national self-consciousness as a result of independent development are the main foundations of spiritual perfection[2].

Understanding the relationship between education, morality, and law is essential for preparing a generation that is not only knowledgeable but also ethically and legally responsible. Therefore, this topic remains highly relevant in contemporary pedagogical and legal research.

Awakening thought in the student in the educational process requires great effort and skill from the teacher. Correct thinking means creativity. Therefore, the process of teaching in pedagogy is two-sided: the sum of the educational and teaching activities of the teacher performed by the pupil[3]. Without denying this rule, the content of modern education dictates the harmony of universal and national experiences.

Education is the process of acquiring knowledge from a pedagogical point of view, the formation of qualifications and skills, the main means of preparing a person for life and labor.

From the sociological point of view of education, it is explained as follows: education as a modern form of teaching students in special buildings, with an increase in the level of general literacy, with the spread of printed items, was formed fold. Knowledge can now be stored, produced and used in many places and by many at the same time[4]. Education is characterized by bilateral communication (acquisition and training), comprehensive development of the individual and other characteristics. Education is a process of self-awareness, guided by a pedagogue.

It is known that morality, moral upbringing is an ancient concept that is considered one of the main factors shaping national culture. Each nation has its own moral criteria, moral norms, tested by centuries. Morality plays a classical role in national spirituality. At the same time, nationalism and universality in morality form a single whole, united among themselves.

It is known from the views of the wise people of our country that attitude to life, morality, justice and spiritual research are built on the philosophy of perfection in society. According to this philosophy, happiness is the only creature that must strive for happiness and goodness and live on the basis of these principles. Because it has the ability to recognize, understand the existence that is different from other creatures, to stand higher than them.

The rich spirituality and enlightenment, formed in the East, laid the foundation for development, which caused a sharp turn in the history of mankind in different periods, in different regions.

DISCUSSION AND RESULTS

The analysis shows that pedagogical innovations and moral-spiritual education are closely interconnected with the development of legal awareness and civic responsibility in society. Modern innovative teaching methods, including interactive technologies, student-centered learning, and digital educational tools, significantly improve learners' understanding of legal norms and social rules. These innovations make the learning process more engaging and help students better internalize concepts related to law, justice, and responsibility.

At the same time, moral-spiritual education strengthens the ethical foundation of individuals, shaping their attitudes toward honesty, fairness, respect for others, and adherence to laws.

When combined with pedagogical innovations, it creates a comprehensive educational environment where knowledge acquisition is accompanied by value formation.

This integration ensures that learners not only understand legal principles but also develop a personal commitment to follow them in practice.

The results of the study indicate that legal awareness is significantly higher among individuals who are exposed to both innovative teaching methods and systematic moral-spiritual education.

Such individuals demonstrate a stronger sense of civic duty, greater respect for legal norms, and more active participation in social life. Furthermore, educational institutions that implement innovative pedagogical approaches alongside moral education contribute more effectively to the formation of law-abiding citizens.

Overall, the findings confirm that the combination of pedagogical innovations and moral-spiritual education has a positive impact on strengthening legal culture. This integration plays an important role in preparing individuals who are not only professionally competent but also socially responsible and legally conscious, which is essential for the development of a stable civil society.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, pedagogical innovations and moral-spiritual education play a vital role in strengthening the legal consciousness and civic responsibility of individuals within society.

Their integration ensures not only the improvement of the quality of education but also the formation of ethically responsible and law-abiding citizens.

The study confirms that pedagogical innovations create effective and modern learning conditions, while moral-spiritual education shapes values such as honesty, justice, respect for law, and social responsibility.

When applied together, they contribute to the development of a stable educational environment that supports the principles of civil society.
